mouncement that she would leave the river yester
by, so that until the preparations were made for achilly leaving there was little stir upon the river.
Indually, however, as the steamings began to move bet and get their tow ropes in, it seemed suddenly break upon the amphibious population, at both its of the stream, that they were at last about to see a vessel whose presence has made Deptforu and it is of Dogs famous throughout the world.

Then ensued an extraordinary scene. Thousands on thousands of people were seen rushing to the see side from all points. Boats of every kind and a sere launched, crowded to the water's edge, and a sere launched, crowded to the water's edge, and the banks assemed suddenly instinct.

stream and its banks seemed suddenly instinct h life. There were not so much cheers as continua souting—a genuine outburst of enthusiasm and light. Even the wan and sickly inmates of the samen's Hospital Ship turned out upon the deck or maded the ports with their wan faces, to give one but or wave a cap to the vessel which swept so candly by. The very first turn at Greenwich show-it Captain Harrison a d all the officers of the vessel at the great ship was as thoroughly under command as river steamboat, and that the only difficulty to sovercome, or gather to be contended against, was as length in turning the sharp curves of the river at fremwich, Blackwall and Woolwich.

The vessel's draught was 21 feet 10 inches aft, and feet 8 inches forward-a-out the very worst trim which she could have left her moorings, being we by the head five inches, instead of some five feet in by the stern: 28 or 24 feet may appear no great each of water, but when it is recollected that this as the minimum required at the turnings, and over the length of 800 feet, which is more than the breadth five Thames at Westminister, it will be seen at once at these angles were at first regarded with a certain bount of anxiety and distrust. A few moves of the see, however, showed that she was perfectly in soil. She steered as easily as a wager-boat, and a regines were found capable of starting her into the or arresting her progress, literally, almost by angle movement of the hand.

It Greenwich, on both sides of the river, an immediate multitude had collected, but it was at Blackwhich she could have left her moorings, being

Every house was crowded, and the roofs meel with spectators; the mast house was occured, the pier swarmed, the tops and yards of the vestion the docks seemed alive. As the great ship approached the enthusiasm seemed to pass the bounds the ordinarily mark such displays with Englishma. The dense mass cheered, shouted, waved hats, handkerchiefs, with an abandon of gratificate that was heart-stirring. It was really almost a trivial reception, and all seemed to have, as Englishma, a share in the finest, swiftest, strongest and absonest ship which the world has yet seen.

triumph of the grandest idea which has ever been thated in naval architecture.

Sockwall Point was indeed the turning point in a firtunes of the Great Eustern. The river at this at forms an acute angle, round which the tide pe with strong but most unequal force. The admits manner in which Capt. Harrison and the late, Mr. Atkinson, managed the ship, the power regularity with which the engines worked, would, an ambstructed, have soon got the vessel round a place. But, of course, right in the center of the late, a bark (the Kingfisher) was moored, while a late beyond her 1 y a schooner in such a manner as charly to block the "fairway" down the stream. It is to block the "fairway" down the stream and the late of the Great Eastern's all mand, and tried to do so, but the strain was too the the most critical moment two of the hawthe at the most critical moment two of the hawthe beyond a doubt, in a perilous position, as the pof the tide was strong, and in an instant drove towards shore. Nothing but the great power of the inessawed her here, though it was a delicate that to me the them properly. It was necessary in-interact the influence of the tide and get a manner as would not give way enough to her on shore on the opposite side of the river. Mastely this was effected, fresh hawsers were ed to the tugs, the bark, the cause of all the peril, ped her anchor, and after an anxious delay of ten or fifteen minutes, the Great Eastern and slowly round and turned the point of tanger. Is as a great relief to all on board, and to none to then Messrs. the most experienced pilots on board. As soon as the vessel was left to herself an increased amount of speed was got on her. This was done, not in the least with a view of testing her power, but literally only to give her good steerage way, and move her engines

Throughout the whole course down the river the paddle engines had never been moved at a greater speed than from four to six revolutions per minute, and the screw at from twelve to eighteen. In fact, neither engine was moved till it became actually necessary to assist the tugs. Yesterday, however, when our valuable little aids, which had realized the fable of the mouse and the lion, and freed the Great Eastern from all her river toils, were cast adrift at Chapman's Head, more speed was put upon the vessel, and in ten minutes she set at rest forever all doubt as to her being the fastest vessel beyond comparison in the world. It has already been stated that the proper sea-going trim of the Great Eastern is a little over four feet down by the stern Instead of this she is at present six inches down by the head, while her whole draught of water is too light to allow the proper immersion to her paddle floats, and no less than four feet of her screw blades are out of water.

Any one at all acquainted with steamships will see that an attempt at the real speed under such c roumstances was out of the question. Yet, even in this trim, enough was done to show the marvellous power which this vessel will possess when fully ready for sea. At set the Great Eastern is intended to work at twenty-nive pounds of steam, the paddles going fourteen revolutions, and the screw only twentyseven. Yet when not employing two-thirds of her power, and in the worst trim against a strong tide, she ran from the Lower Hope point to the Nore light ship, a distance of fifteen statute miles in two minutes under the hour. Calculating rom this data, it will be found that working to her ordinary sea-going power will give her, even in her present trim, an average of from eighteen to nineteen miles an hour. During the time that the vessel was going at this speed of thirteen knots, or fifteen miles, the engines were worked with an ease that when their size and power was considered, was perfectly astounding. There was scarcely any vibration of the vessel and as far as could be gathered from outward objects, one might much easier have imagined one's self writing in a Parisan saloon than in the state cabin of the Great Eastern, flying down to the Nore. One thing connected with the vessel is as remarkable as her other characteristics. Even when going thirteen knots an hour there was an utter absence of "swell" in her wake-even less, as far as could be judged from the deck, than is made by the ordinary penny steamers, and not one-half as much as was thrown up by our own tugs The Nore Light was reached at half-past twelve o'clock to-day, and the anchor let go in eight fathoms, with thirty-five fathoms from the hawsehole. Before anchoring, the vessel was put about, and went com-pletely round under steam in less than three-quarters of a mile. In a few minutes afterwards Admiral Harvey came alongside in his yacht, dipping his en-sign as he approached, as every single vessel, man-of-war or merchantman, which has yet met the Great Eastern, has hitherto done. In an hour afterwards the ship was surrounded by yaches and sailing boats of all kinds. During the run down from Gravesend the fixing of Mr. Langley's steering apparatus was completed, and worked to perfection. Captain Comstock was, as on the previous day, at his post on the wright, and at the foot of Kaahumanu street.
